Lesson plan

This lesson explores how courage and intellect can confront inequality. Students analyze Mason's experiences and consider where biases exist today—in themselves and society.

Activities include reflective writing, classroom discussions on fairness, and creative projects imagining a world free of prejudice.

Learning Outcome

Before Reading:

- What do you know about the Civil Rights Movement?
- What is 'fairness'? Can you name a time when something felt unfair?
- Why might someone be judged for something beyond their control?

During Reading :

- How does Mason handle being left out or dismissed?
- What role does his father play in supporting him?
- Why is the typing contest such a big deal in the story?

After Reading-

- What barriers did Mason face—and how did he overcome them?
- What does this story say about how society treats people who are ‘different’?
- Reflect on your own biases: Are there times when you’ve made a judgment about someone based on their skin color, name, accent, clothes, or beliefs?
- How can we become more aware of our own biases—and begin to change them?

Activities:

- Typing Tribute: Hold a typing contest to honor Mason’s victory and explore typing as a skill.
- Breaking Bias Journal: Students reflect on where they see bias in the world and brainstorm ways to respond to it.
- Civil Rights Timeline: Build a timeline of major civil rights events to give historical context to Mason’s experience.
- Speak Up Posters: Create visual messages about standing up for others and fighting injustice peacefully.

Expected Outcomes

ABOUT ZAMASAMA

Zamasama is a nonprofit platform that brings together stories from around the world to help children discover that beneath our differences—of culture, language, or belief—we share the same hopes, joys, and dreams. Today's children are tomorrow's citizens, and the responsibility of building a more peaceful, tolerant, and empathetic world lies with them. That's why it's vital to instill these values early—through stories that help them rise above the biases they inherit, and see diversity as a strength that unites us all.
